LEARNING THE ROPES – A group of 20 young people recently participated in a career-development session at Kearny Bank's Fairfield corporate office. Five of the bank's senior leaders conducted a panel discussion on career preparedness, facilitated a speed interviewing exercise, and led a financial literacy workshop. The session was coordinated by the New Jersey office of the All Stars Project, a nationwide non-profit focused on helping youngsters from underserved communities grow into confident, capable professionals.

"Like most of my colleagues, I benefited from a lot of guidance and advice as I built my career," says Veronica Ross, Kearny Bank Senior Vice President/Director of Engagement. "So, I really enjoyed this chance to offer insight to some young adults who are just laying the foundations for careers. If anything I said is helpful to one of our participants, I'll certainly count it as time extremely well spent."
